Thread blocks guided slaves to the North

By Jo McCord

The quilt blocks depicted on the page are a way to commemorate their history. McCord explains that these blocks were made by African American women who were part of the Underground Railroad. They used these blocks as signals to enslaved people to follow the correct path to freedom. The blocks were often made with symbols that represented freedom, such as a horse or a key.